THE FOURTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER PENTECOST Weekly Bulletin #48
 September 13, 1987 - - - Green

In every well-organized society must there not be an authority which has the power to make laws and execute them? And if no authority did exist, would not society soon fall into anarchy? The Church is an immense society, spread all over the world; she begets us to faith, in regenerating us in the waters of baptism; she teaches us the doctrine of the Saviour, its morals, its dogmas, and its mysteries; she nourishes us with the Eucharistic Bread and with all the Graces which the Sacraments confer upon us; she forms a vast body united in the oneness of faith, in the use of the same Sacraments, and in the observance of the same laws. Therefore, there must be in the Church an authority which has the power to make us observe the Divine Laws of which she is the depository, to direct consciences, to establish and preserve good order, and which, consequently, can make laws to which ALL the faithful are obliged to submit.
